

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

March 29, 1923.

Hon. S. L. Staples,
Secretary of State,
Capitol Building,
Austin, Texas.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

Senate Bill No. 181, which is filed herewith with you, with my veto and disapproval, places additional restrictions upon the rights of a person to have his estate administered without cumbersome restrictions and limitations. This bill, if enacted into a law, would have a tendency to cause estates of deceased persons to be indefinitely tied up in the courts, when, as a matter of fact, the testator desired that his estate should be settled without the expense and the delay and the limitations that this bill would entail.

It is, therefore, vetoed, and I am sending it to you herewith for your files.

Respectfully,

Governor.
